

Summer School 2023: Tunisia and the Arab World in Revolution

Purpose: The curriculum for this course focuses on Tunisian and Arab protest and revolution since 2011. It seeks to immerse students into the happenings, ideas, and discourses of the region's contentious politics over the last twelve years. The context, thought, and processes of transformation all guide the lectures as well as the seminars of the course. Students will have an opportunity to interact with scholars, decision-makers, and civil society activists to gain an understanding of the processes of socio-political change over the past decade. In so doing, they will "test" via daily practicums and fieldwork sessions ideas and theories imparted in lectures. Thus, this course supplements textual with contextual learning, i.e., local knowledge and experiences through daily encounters, interaction and engagement with actual civic, political and cultural actors.

Language of Instruction: English

Note: While the course is delivered and assessed in English, international students will be encouraged to draw on readings in their own languages. This is enriching for the course and for the principal of pluralist knowledge.

Dates: July 24-August 7, 2023

Summary:

Demos-Center for Democratic Sustainability is pleased to launch the summer school on Tunisian and Arab "revolution," in cooperation with the Faculty of Literature, Arts, and Humanities of the University of Tunis-Manouba. The school covers an all-inclusive program of key theoretical readings, empirical accounts, and world-experience activities that combine the two. The modules taught deliver a well-rounded knowledge journey, which engages theory, experience and actual civic and political practitioners. That journey begins in Tunisia, the birthplace of the Arab Spring, and home to some of the world's oldest centers of Arabo-Islamic learning. The program's three modules are delivered by leading scholars. In addition to class-room teaching-learning, fieldwork and encounters with civil society, media, political and activist figures and leaders, men and women, official and unofficial, will supplement knowledge imparted in the theoretical classes. The program delivers a most intellectually stimulating learning on theory, practice and on the latest revolutionary trends. Over two weeks of classes, debates, web-based activities, study visits and fieldwork tasks, the students enrolled in the program will be trained via constructivist methods that equip them with a knowledge foundation and skills suited to both graduate study and other career paths.

The summer school is open to international students. Enrolled participants shall have full access to reading materials, slides and handouts. Thus, the program will introduce and enhance learners' theoretical, empirical and critical grasp of the main questions concerning revolution, international and Arab. In so doing, the course leaders and tutors' chief aim is to meet learning outcomes such as:

1. Acquisition of a comprehensive regime of theories, concepts and readings on world and Arab revolutions
2. Enabling an intellectual competitive edge on comparative revolutions
3. Training participants into the relevant knowledge foundations of the subject matter, thus empowering them with the skills to navigate both academic and professional careers

Structure: The program will consist of four mini-modules on the following topics:

1. The Tunisian Revolution: A 'walking lecture' tour of major sites and stations in Tunisia's revolution (17 Dec. 2010-14 Jan. 2011) from Habib Bourguiba Avenue to Bardo. Students will learn about the who, what, where, and how of the Arab Spring's launch. This module will also cover the major junctures in the 11 years of Tunisia's political (democratic) transition. The dualities of institution-building and the development of civic/political forces, on the one hand, and the shortcomings of political transition, on the other, will be explored.
2. The Arab Spring Revolutions: Lectures and testimonies charting how Tunisia's revolution spread to neighboring regional countries, from Egypt, Libya, Yemen, Syria and Bahrain (2011-) to the more recent crop of uprisings in Algeria, Sudan, and Lebanon (2019-). Emphasis will be on the diverging trajectories of initially similar popular revolutions calling for freedom and dignity. What structural features, internal and external actors, and fateful strategies and decisions explain variations in how the Arab spring has played out in these different settings? The prospects for regional democratization will also be discussed.
3. Research Methods Practicum: On-site introductions to Tunisian archives relevant to social science research will be combined with practical instruction on semi-structured and focus group interviews. Trips span national libraries, documentation centers, and other archival repositories of possible use in their own research. Guest speakers will include scholars and researchers from within the Tunisian academy. Basic hows and whys of interviewing will be covered. Students will have opportunities to conduct their own interviews with members of civil society, academics, and political and development experts. Conveners will provide students with 'live' methodological feedback. MA and PhD students would benefit from this fieldwork, which is a rigorous introduction to source material, interviews, and networking.

4. Civil Society Encounters: Interactive sessions with activists and political parties will take place in the evenings/nights. Students will learn first-hand about the work and experiences of these civic and political actors. Question-answer segments, trips to association or party headquarters, and overviews of some activities taking place in Tunisia's lively civil society will enrich student learning through one-of-a-kind 'participant observation.'

5. Arabic Language Instruction: One hour of Tunisian daily dialect instruction. This is 'live language' immersion for the purpose of navigating the culture.

Alongside the four modules will be guided study trips of major political and cultural sites in Tunis and Sousse (Zaytuna Mosque, Sadiqiyya School, Tunis Souq, Sousse Fort, etc.). Students will get a flavor of these Mediterranean cities at the crossroads of the Arabo-Islamic world and Southern Europe. They will come to appreciate the richness of architecture, history, urban life, the people, and the cuisine of cities steeped in centuries-old civilization and political activity.

Schedule: Mon.-Friday: 8:30-12:00

Study Visits: 4:00-7:00 p.m.

Saturdays (July 29th and August 5th): Day-long study trip
